Unlock the Flavor of Spices and Herbs

This week information on the most used spices and herbs will be featured. This is continued from last week's information.

MARJORAM (Herb) - Interchangeable with its sister-seasoning oregano, this subtle herb is sweeter and milder. It adds interesting flavor to peas, string beans, limas, stews, soups, sausages and fish sauces. Add a sprinkle to lamb while roasting for a gourmet flavor touch. Marjoram is the sweet form of oregano.

MINT (Aromatic Leaves) - Everyone knows the affinity this strong, sweet, tangy, yet cool herb has for lamb! But it for flavoring soups and stews, jellies, fish sauces and beverages; for adding piquancy to peas. Add chopped, fresh mint and butter to cooked carrots just before serving.

MUSTARD (Aromatic Seed) - Prized by Hippocrates as a medicine, mustard is more versatile today. Whole, it gives zing to salads, pickles and beets; ground, it sparks sauces, meats and gravies. Where would hot dogs and ham be without prepared mustard?

NUTMEG (Spice) - European traders tried to restrict this spice to its native East Indies only to be foiled by seed-carrying birds. Nutmeg (the kernel found under the outer covering of mace) livens sauces, puddings, doughnuts and custards. It is good in cauliflower and spinch, too.

OREGANO (Herb) - This herb closely resumbles marjoram in taste, though the flavor is stronger and pleasantly bitter. It is indeispensable in most Mexican and Italian dishes! It gives a nice nip to pork, stews, gravies, eggs and vegetables. This herb is often called the "pizza pie" spice. It is the wild form of marjoram.

PAPRIKA (Spice) - This is the cool and mild member of the pepper family, and a rich source of Vitamins A and C. The brilliant red color and slightly sweet taste make this spice a favorite garnish for fish, salads, meats, poultry, sougs, eggs, vegetables and cream sauces.

PARSLEY (Herb) - This noble herb should be used in more ways than as a garnish. In its dried or flake form, it can add color and a distinctively mild and subtle flavor to many dishes. See how happily it enhances salads, sauces, soups, meats, fish, vegetables, stews and dressings. One teaspoon parsley flakes equals two sprigs of fresh parsley. The raw form of parsley will sweeten the breath.

PEPPER (Spice) - Whether black or white, pepper is harvested from the same tree. Chefs prefer white pepper for making white sauces, because it is less conspicuous.

POPPY SEED (Aromatic Seed) - One of Holland's contributions to livelier cooking, these crunchy nut-like seeds are delightful used whole as a topping for breads, cakes, cookies, and are delicious in noodles and salads. Mix with strained honey as a filling for pastries. Poppy seeds do not come from the plant that yields opium. There are 900,000 poppy seeds to the pound.

ROSEMARY (Herb) - "There is rosemary, that's for remembrance," and any dish brightened with its distinctively fresh, sweet flavor is memorable indeed. This fragrant herb is tantalizing in lamb dishes, soups, stews, boiled potatoes, turnips and cauliflower.

SAGE (Herb) - America's most popular herb, sage comes to us from Yugoslavia, where it grows wild. Aromatic, warm and faintly bitter, it has a natural affinity for pork and other meats. It is also toothsome in baked fish, salads, sausages, poultry, meat stuffings and chowders.

SESAME SEED (Aromatic Seed) - A faint nutlike aroma and a taste a bit like almonds is the characteristic of this seed. It is good with baked goods and candy. Many tons of sesame seed are consumed annually in the delicious Jewish Halvah candy, and other confections.

TERRAGON (Herb) - The dried leaves and flowering tops of a perennial herb - with a flavor reminiscent of anise. It is used in pickles, prepared mustard and in flavoring tarragon vinegar.

THYME (Herb) - The ancient Greeks breakfasted on honey made from thyme blossoms. Today, we're most likely to find this warm, pungent herb in poultry stuffings, stews, meat loaf, clam chowder and croquettes, or sprinkled on sliced tomatoes. Thyme was used to make the bed for Mary.

TURMERIC (Spice) - This herb is a member of the giner family, but nothing like it in taste. It is the mainstay spice of prepared mustards and many relishes and pickles. Turmeric is vividly yellow in color, aromatic and faintly bitter in taste. It gives a pleasant "bite" to creamed eggs, fish and seafood.

GRANULATED ONION - Used on meats, ground beef, salads, in casseroles, consommes, liquid dressings, souffles and dips where real onion flavor is desired. One teaspoon of granulated onion equals one-third of a medium onion.

SAFFRON (Spice) - This is the most expensive spice and is made from the dried stigmas of autumn crocus. It takes 75,000 blossoms to yield one pound.

To a murderer:

I saw what you did to that cat. I saw that poor little kitty skinned down the back. It was walking around downtown with the skin cut open all the way across its back. It was screaming in agony.

You evil wicked person. God is going to punish you. God says the evil person will be "filled with ... misfortune and calamity." (Proverbs 12:21). Your only hope is to throw yourself on your knees and pray to Jesus that He will forgive your exceedingly disgusting crime.
